

ABSTRACT

An optical unit is composed of transparent blocks and dichroic films that are different in wavelength range of a reflectible light beam. The transparent blocks are connected in a row so that the dichroic films may be 5 interposed between the respective transparent blocks, and may be in parallel to each other.